He says this is a prime, and I doubt it. In case, it is, there should be some secret path in math to do this thing, at least semi-systematically. If so, I want to do this in another form. Might this be the problem of capital? A metaphysical equivalent of gorgeous vehicle-number or anything? The first critic is the resolution of this image, padding rates, this could be fixed relatively easily; and the second and seriously mathematical point is the selection of (1, 8) as the colors to be pixelated. This is openly existing, on \mathbb{X} ; and I dig it.

However, I'm still a shitpoasting goon in the cave to touch this costly emblem, I should exercise some programming to filtrate only numbers on this .jpg.

Prime Painter

A sort of fresh prince who could write or paint this kind of thing may be on the duty for \mathbb{X} as a Corp. I adore him/her. A beautiful joking machine for the purity of nothing.

Possible Cost in Theory

How much resource could one print be costed? How much could the print be valuable as a picture, or a kind of currency.

My Work

This is my print, few, truly high culture for tech-bros. Good taste, bro.

What this could be?

Maybe a true joke since its beauty.

Penrose Tiling Things & Its Automation

This kind of true joke could once in a while emerge in the highly intellectual community where bulky thinking powers are always idling,

but what is this-ness, this vibe, the brilliant nothing-ness?
